We were spared this day our daily "open letter."

This is the day when Windham county fishermen steal a month on the remainder of the state.

If they want more evidence of Governor Prouty's qualifications as an auto speed expert, just call up the Revere, Mass. police.

There is always a flea in the ointment; following the announcement of the raise in wages on several railroads comes the announcement of a possible raise in tariffs, passenger or freight.

Brandon and St. Albans are running a close race in raising money for hotels, and the contest looks now like a dead heat and both coming under the wire, nose and nose. Congratulations!

Notwithstanding the Lebanon fiasco, there is gold in New Hampshire hills. We have seen Senator Swenson and other successful granite men take it out.—Concord Monitor.

Barre also has its "gold mines" and its gold mines; and the granite "gold mines."

Half the joy of fishing will be done away with, now that a Connecticut man has invented a combination fishpole and weighing scales. Those big fish which we lost will then vanish into actual pounds and ounces.

Quite frequently, we read in the New York newspapers decidedly caustic criticism of the New York police and detectives as inefficient and powerless to suppress crime; but we haven't noticed any particular effusions over the capture of two alleged post office thieves and the recovery of $75,000 of the loot taken from the Richmond, Va., post office. Perhaps the New York police and detectives are judged by their failures, rather than by their successes; many people are. However, just one little hint of praise ought to be forthcoming for the good work of the detectives in this Richmond robbery.

Thirty-eight former banking men are enjoying the United States' hospitality at Leavenworth, Kansas. The census of the similar guests at Atlanta has not been completed yet, but it certainly includes some very exclusive personages.

AGRICULTURAL TRAINING IN VERMONT.

A persistently floated objection to the state agricultural colleges of the present day is the statement that the graduates of these colleges are over-educated, that they fail to find the farm attractive to them after passing several years in advanced study in their particular line of work, and that they, therefore, branch out into some occupation entirely foreign to their training. Therefore, their special training in agriculture is lost, was the conclusion of the argument. The claim was made in Vermont, as elsewhere; and there have not been statistics ready at hand to dispute the assertion. Nor are there statistics at the present time, so far as The Times knows. But at least one other state agricultural college is able to present figures which successfully refute the common argument that a course in an agricultural college trains the student away from the farm. It is the Minnesota state agricultural college, whose dean, Albert F. Woods, now reports that of the 108 students graduated from his department last week at least seventy-five per cent, will go back to the farm and put in practice the things which they have learned during their course at the state college. It is said, furthermore, that the percentage of those going back to the farm may reach as high as eighty-five; and of the remainder nearly all will continue their studies in agricultural lines, either to become government and state inspectors or to teach agriculture in other colleges and schools.

With those figures of the state agricultural college of Minnesota at hand, it is not possible to say that the agricultural college of to-day trains its students away from the farm and from agricultural subjects. The percentage of graduates going back to the farm may not be as large in Vermont as in Minnesota, because the possibilities of agricultural pursuits are not so favorable in this state as in the western territory, either because of lack of acres or because of the "lay of the land"; but the Vermont agricultural college at Burlington, with all its adjuncts, including the experiment station, is doing a fine work in just the field which needs bolstering up at the present time. It has already succeeded in introducing improved methods in many sections of the state, where its graduates have settled; and its work is likely to grow more influential, rather than less.

SAILORS MAY OBJECT.

To Removal of the Maine from Havana Harbor.

Washington, D. C., April 1.—Sailors of the navy will be deprived of the source of their most cherished souvenirs, if the wreck of the Maine is removed from Havana harbor. A bill to raise the wreck or to blow it up has passed the House and is pending in the Senate. A great mass of tattered and battered steel, extending perhaps 10 feet above the surface, marks the resting place of the Maine. When American warships visit the harbor, it is this monument to one of the great disasters of the navy and the tomb of scores of their comrades, whose bodies were never recovered, that interests them more than any of the sights ashore.

A favorite pastime for the sailors is to visit the wreck in small boats and with hammer and chisel get chips of steel to be carried away as mementos. With a fleet in the harbor it is not unusual to see and hear a dozen sturdy young men in white uniforms laboring to get their souvenirs.

Reasons given for removing the Maine are that the wreck is a menace to navigation and that it is the duty of the United States to recover the bodies of the men, who lost their lives in the government's service. The Spaniards have contended ever since the blowing up of the Maine that this government would never raise the wreck because, they said, it would show that the ship was destroyed by an explosion from within. As the charge that the vessel was blown up by a Spanish torpedo was one of the causes of the war, the Spaniards insist that the United States fears a disclosure that it did Spain an injustice in basing hostilities even partly on the destruction of the battleship. Investigation made by a board of American experts, however, resulted in a decision that the Maine was blown up from the outside.

Good Attendance at the Episcopal Fair Last Evening.

There was a large crowd at the Episcopal fair last night. The ladies have a fine display of fancy and useful articles; many were sold and many remain to be sold. The fair is to be continued until Saturday night. Ice cream and cake, sandwiches and coffee are served. During last evening a good program of vocal and instrumental music was given, together with a talk by Rev. O. J. Booth. In addition to local talent, Arthur Cole, Miss Coburn and Mrs. Boettig of Barre took part in the program. A short play is to be given to-night, and Mr. and Mrs. A. W. Allen of Barre have promised to be present to take part in the program so that a good time is assured for this evening.

Gentlemen's clothing repaired; coats and vests cleaned; button holes remade. Also, mending of all kinds neatly done. 7 French street (first floor).
